While both Kim Cattrall and legendary "Sex and the City" costume designer Patricia Field may have opted out of HBO Max's reboot, "And Just Like That," the pair recently reunited to collaborate on another small-screen project.

Cattrall is set to star in Netflix's upcoming series "Glamorous" as a famous model-turned-makeup mogul, and brought in Field to help with the show's wardrobe, Page Six Style can confirm.

"I worked with a designer [Nancy Gould], because these days, I prefer to consult," Field, 82, told us at Monday's Fashion Group International (FGI) Rising Star Awards, where she delivered the keynote speech.

Field and Kim Cattrall, pictured in 2022, have remained fast friends through the years.

While neither participated in “SATC” reboot “And Just Like That,” they’ve shared Instagram posts documenting their hangouts since the spinoff premiered.

Field has said that while dressing Cattrall, 66, as confident and highly sexual PR exec Samantha on “SATC,” she butted heads with the series’ male producers, who envisioned the character wearing skin-baring miniskirts, plunging necklines and other stereotypically “sexy” looks at all times.

Instead, the costume whiz dressed Cattrall in bold-shouldered blazers, bright colors and look-at-me metallics to telegraph her power without baring it all.

And Field told us we’ll see similar looks on the actress’ “Glamorous” character, Madolyn Addison.

While “Sex and the City” producers allegedly wanted Samantha’s looks to show skin at all times, Field pushed for a subtler take on power dressing.

“It’s another character,” she said. “[But] the color is very important, and the sexy silhouette is part of it, definitely. It’s something we established on ‘Sex and the City’ and it’s very signature [Cattrall]. It comes naturally for her; she looks great that way.”

While she and Cattrall have remained good friends since their “SATC” days and Field described her time working on “Glamorous” as “wonderful,” she admits she didn’t always have the easiest time dressing John Corbett’s Aidan, who will return for Season 2 of “And Just Like That.”
